

Study on the Informed Consent in the Medical Institution

Tiantian Liang

Northeast Petroleum University at Qinhuangdao, Qinhuangdao, China

ABSTRACT

In the medical institution, the enforcement of Medical Doctor Law, the treatment rules of medical accidents stipulates the importance of the doctors' obligations and the consent and selection right of patients. For every patient, the doctor should make an individual treatment plan so the patient can cooperate with the doctor well to achieve satisfactory results. The prevention of accidents should be emphasized. The medical doctors should be active and it is necessary to inform important information to patients. What's more, a medical management system should be complied with the law standard. The consent and selection right of the patients should be respected and be protected by laws.

KEYWORDS : informed consent , medical malpractice , obligation, treatment

Introduction

In a sense, this relocation of the doctors and the patient clearly defines the basic rights and obligations. It makes a positive significance in reducing the conflict between doctors and patients. Therefore, informed consent and selection right in cosmetic surgery has its necessary significance.

Informed consent in the medical institution

The right of informed consent and informed choice is a basic right of patients in accordance with the national relevant regulations. The obligation of the doctors to inform the patients is in order to achieve the equality in law, and all the medical activities must follow the legal basis. The doctor-patient relationship from a legal sense is established by the principal of equality between the civil legal relations, namely the voluntary, fair, making compensation for equal value, honesty and credit principle.

In fact, the consent and selection right is based on the difference between the knowledge level of the doctors and the patients and the high risk during the operation. It should follow the principle of medical ethics to fulfill the duty of disclosure. To understand the content and process of diagnosis and treatment can help patients weigh its advantages and disadvantages and evaluate all the treatment programs so that they can make decisions based on their knowledge and ability. This is not only conducive to the correct diagnosis and the formation of the treatment plan but also has psychological and legal significance. It makes patients feel the importance of their own value, so that doctors can mobilize the enthusiasm of the patients to actively participate in medical decision-making. In addition, it can enhance the patients' respect and trust to the doctors, so as to facilitate the communication between the doctors and the patients, establish doctor-patient harmonious relationship and reduce the medical malpractice.

Conclusions

The doctors should consciously accept the supervision and restriction of law, improve the cultivation of medical ethics. And it is essential to strengthen the daily medical management and increase the propaganda and education of patients. Establish and improve the rules and regulations is important to ensure that patients - agreed institutes to implement.

REFERENCES

[1] LIU Zhaohui, XU Bo, YU Na (2010). The implementation of medical right to prevent medical risk. Chinese Health Quality Management, 24(04), 23-26.