Introduction :

India is having a rich cultural heritage and variety of traditions. The History of India belongs to versatile epic stories where God sent the sagas and there son Manu then became the first king who ruled the earth and right from the Ramayana and Mahabharata we reached to this Kalug or modern world. As per Hindu mythology woman is the most important part of nature and its empowerment. In previous time female usually look after all household work and man use to take care of farming but in modern world scenario has changed, female equally leads the society with men in almost all the fields. Therefore female still need support in their family as well as profession not only in normal life but in sports also. The life of the sportsman is very disciplined and tough. They have to perform in high physical and mental pressure. Thus the role of the public and private sectors which become very important developing country like India. The facilities and service provided by these institutions remarkably improve the participation of Indian female in wushu. To know the status of Indian female in the participation of wushu and how much facility and support provided by the social institutions effect their participation. The researcher took the subject for the upliftment of the Indian wushu players. Wushu is well known Chinese form of Martial Art which is very good for the competitions and self-defence specially for woman. As it is at an early stage in India therefore it needs special focus and attention by all the public and private sectors for both man and woman.

The different state and departments need to provide favorable playing environment to their female wushu players and should also be given basic facilities and time to time encouragement on their performance at all levels. Wushu is just not a sport but also a very effective martial art which helps to keep female fit as well defend themselves in life threatening situations. If the female get proper motivation and encouragement from their state and department they can do wonders and uplift themselves in the society besides the help of their families.
